

SUBMITTED

With their harvest of squash from an 1860's garden planted as part of a Children's Festival last May celebrating the 150th anniversary of St. Thomas Anglican Church in Stittsville are Sunday School youngsters (front row, from left) Noah McMillan, Anna Stipetic and Logan McMillan and (back row, from left) Merilee Clarke of the Sunday School, Kaitlyn Harding, Sophia Pierce, Junia Chapman, Isabelle Chapman, Sarah Smith and Emma Passmore of the Sunday School.

Harvest of squash in garden

John Curry
john.curry@metroland.com

The 150th anniversary year of St. Thomas Anglican Church in Stittsville has been one of plenty, quite literally.

Last May, as part of the Children's Festival which the church held as one of its 150th anniversary celebrations, the Sunday School children of the church planted an 1860's-era garden.

Well, it is now harvesting time for this garden and the children filled up a wheelbarrow with the squash which they harvested from this garden.

And the children shared this squash with others, delivering some of the squash to the Stittsville Food Bank.

SUBMITTED

St. Thomas Anglican Church Sunday School youngsters Sophia Pierce (left) and Linden Pierce (right, foreground) hand over some of the squash grown by the Sunday School children in a garden celebrating the 150th anniversary of the church to representatives of the Stittsville Food Bank (from left) Jo-Anne Ilkiw, Ella Mohr and Kathy Dennison.